LETTER FROM THE EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

To the Maryland Legal Community:

The editorial board of Volume 37 of the University of Baltimore Law Forum presents the first issue of the 2006-2007 academic year. With this issue, we proudly carry on Law Forum's tradition of providing the Maryland legal community with insight into the important legal issues of the day. It is our sincere hope that the articles contained in this issue will serve as engaging and informative tools that you, as legal practitioners, can apply to the important work that you do every day.

I could not be more impressed with the hard work, diligence and commitment to excellence that this year's board and staff has exhibited. Through late nights, early mornings, and all of the hours in between, this group has persisted. The fingerprints of each member of the board and staff are firmly stamped on this issue.

The authors of the articles in this issue have made an outstanding contribution to our understanding of complex, legal problems. In our first article, Brando Starkey, a student at Harvard Law School, intelligently analyzes the labor law implications of Maurice Clarett's challenge to the National Football League's policy of excluding players based on age. As a book end to Mr. Starkey's article, We are extremely thankful to Professor Michael Hayes of the University of Baltimore School of Law who enthusiastically agreed to give his view of Mr. Starkey's assertions and to comment further on the state of anti-trust and labor law.

Our second article, written by Professor Michele Gilligan of the University of Baltimore School of Law, cogently describes the challenges and ethical conundrums that foreign legal practitioners present to the Maryland legal community. As Professor Gilligan correctly points out, in a modern legal system where so much business is transacted across borders, it is not business as usual.

Finally, our Recent Development pieces take a look at thirteen of the most influential cases decided by the Court of Appeals of Maryland in the past year. These include cases which will have a significant impact on class-action litigation, the same-sex marriage debate, and the criminal procedures of voir dire and jury instruction.

As always, your input and feedback are necessary for the continued progress and development of our journal.

Best Regards,

Bryan Davis
Editor-In-Chief
